

For some parents, they might believe their child is demonstrating behavioral problems. Their son might struggle with making eye contact, or have frequent and long temper tantrums. Their daughter might be constantly on the go, exceedingly impulsive, and easily distracted. While these symptoms are often diagnosed as either autism or ADHD, two mothers Kelly Jurecko and Dawn Eagle, want to educate parents about a neurological disorder likely at work: Sensory Processing Disorder (SPD). Their organization, SPD Parent Zone works to inform parents about the signs of SPD, which affects one in twenty children. The organization aims to raise awareness and help other parents realize there is help available and they are not alone.

Learn more during a complimentary lecture for LHFC members and non-members.

Monday, August 2nd

7:30-8:30pm in the Multipurpose room at LHFC

Address: 3098 Falling Waters Blvd, Lindenhurst, IL 60046

Registration is not required.

For more information visit their website at www.spdparentzone.org, or contact Kelly Jurecko, President of SPD Parent Zone @ 847-736-9284